Download MPEG3 Decoder:

In order to play mpeg3 sound recordings you must have software that recognizes the .mp3 format, decoding it so your sound card can play it. If you need this software it can be downloaded from the Fraunhofer web site:

get_mp3_decoder

>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>> 10/15/98 Update <<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

Some visitors have complained that the process of getting the decoder from Fraunhofer is too complicated, or that the Fraunhofer web site is busy all the time. For those of you with PC's running Windows 3.1 and Windows 95 you can now download three flavors of decoders from this fine web site. Note that shareware is not free. If you use it past the time limit noted in the software bundle (usually 30 days) you are expected to register. This applies to the Winamp MP3 decoders. The MP3 decoder MP32WAVX.EXE self extracting file, IS freeware and so you can use it until your mouse ball falls out.

Winamp 1.45 - This decoder is smaller and has fewer of the bells and whistles features of the 2.0 version. However, this is the only version of Winamp that I know of that will allow you to not only play MP3 files, but also to convert them back to .WAV files. This feature is tricky to figure out, and you probably don't need it, but nevertheless it is really handy to have it. I suggest you make a new directory on your hard drive called winamp14, copy the self extracting file (during or after downloading of course) to winamp14, and then double click on the file named winamp14.exe. It will self-extract into the same directory. Then you double click on winamp.exe to run the program. All this stuff also applies to winamp20.

There is a web site called mp3.com that has more of this stuff if you are interested.

Download mpeg3 decoder winamp 1.45

Download mpeg3 decoder winamp 2.0

Mp32wav - The self extracting file mp32wavx.exe contains an MP3 decoder that is not an MP3 player. Instead, it justs converts MP3 recordings into WAV files. This is useful if you wish to run some of your own filters, FFT analysis, or edit the recordings in some way. This program is freeware. I suggest you create a directory named mp32wav and stick the file mp32wavx.exe into it after downloading. When you double click on it, it will self-extract into the same directory. One of the whacky things about this program is that it only saves the WAV files in its own directory. It will let you browse to find the file to convert, but after conversion you will be left scratching your head as to where the doggone WAV file is. Thus my suggestion to name the directory mp32wav to make it easy to find the converted files. Beware that converted MP3 files can really expand, like 6x to 12x, depending on how the MP3 encoding was performed. In other words, don't be surprised if 10 megabytes of free space suddenly disappear and your nearly-full hard drive is now full.

Also, MP3 is not a lossless compression technique. The WAV file you get will not be exactly like the original WAV file before encoding. The difference may not matter much, unless you are looking at the FFT of the recording. You may need to contact us to get a copy of the original WAV files as the FFT will be slightly different.

Some of you have asked about ways to edit .wav files so I have added a way for you to download Cool Edit 96 (a shareware product you must register after 30 days) for this site.

FAQ

What is MP3?

What are the system requirements I need for MP3 files?

How do I play MP3 files?

Where can I find MP3 files?

How do I make my own MP3 files?

Are MP3s legal?

What is MP3?

MP3 stands for MPEG 1 layer 3, which is a way to store music files on a computer disk in such a way that the file size is relatively small, but the sound quality is next to perfect. You can identify MP3 files because they will end in .MP3.

What are the system requirements I need for MP3 files?

You will need sound card and speakers. A 486 DX2 processor at least - preferably AMD 5x86, Cyrix or IBM 6x86, PowerMac or *Pentium (Pentium being recommended). Also hard drive space full "song" Mpeg3's average around 3.4 megabytes each at 128Kbps and 44KHz. Is there a player that will run on a 486 66Mhz or lower? As far as we know, you must have at least a 486DX4 100Mhz for playing full stereo mp3 files.

How do I play the MP3 files?

You can download songs from the net (or make your own) and play them right on your computer and they sound great. Just follow these steps:

Step 1: Download a player. If you would like a complete list of players, check out the Players section of our Mpeg3 Software& Utility Web Site, and choose the player best suited for your computer and needs.

Step 2: Run the installer to install the player. Next uncompress the file you downloaded and run the installer or setup (some players don't need to be installed, just run the program) then either double click on the .MP3 file or choose the MP3 file from the player's menu.

Where can I find Mp3 files?

Where can I find a particular Mp3 that I am searching for? Try our Mpeg3 Software& Utility Web Site's MP3 search page.

How do I make my own MP3 files?

This is a two step process. The first step is to copy a song from an audio CD. This is called CD Ripping. You can download a ripping program from the Rippers section of our Mpeg3 Software& Utility Web Site, and choose the CD ripper best suited for your computer and needs.

The second step is to download an MP3 encoder which will compress a .wav file to MP3 format. You can download a ripping program from the Encoders section of our Mpeg3 Software& Utility Web Site, and choose the encoder best suited for your computer and needs.

Are MP3s legal?

Yes and no, its legal if you encode MP3s from your own CDs and keep them to yourself. But it's illegal to encode MP3s and trade them with others unless you have the permission of the copyright holder of the music. To put it another way, MP3 is simply a file format that can be used either legally or illegally.
